Allocation of Business Among The Different Ministries and Divisions (Schedule I of The Rules of Business, 1996) (Revised up to April 2017) is a document that assigns different departments and divisions within the Bangladeshi government. The schedule provides a list of responsibilities and functions to various ministries and divisions, ensuring a clear distribution of work across the government. It is a crucial document for ensuring that all government departments operate efficiently and effectively.

The document includes a table of contents, which outlines the main sections and sub-sections, providing a quick reference for readers. Each section and sub-section is further divided into paragraphs, each addressing a specific topic or area of responsibility.

The allocation of business among different ministries is crucial for the smooth functioning of the government. It helps in avoiding duplication of efforts and ensures that each department is responsible for its own area of work.

In summary, the document serves as a guide for government officials and serves as a reference for anyone interested in the structure and functions of the Bangladeshi government.
